

Access accommodations checklist

Access accommodations remove barriers so a person can show what they know. They don't lower expectations: they level the ground.

- Extra time to respond or finish tasks.
- Short instructions, one at a time, with visual support.
- A place with fewer distractions or the use of headphones.
- Agreed movement breaks, not experienced as punishment.
- Options to show learning (oral, drawing, project).
- Anticipate routine changes with notice and visual supports.

Start small. Pick one or two accommodations, try for a few weeks and adjust. Small, steady changes make the difference.
